Karen Leonard, GMB National Officer, said:

“Funding is tight for all schools.

“But academies are in an even worse position than the rest because of the excessive salaries paid to some CEOs and executive heads.

“They’re also more prone to outsourcing, which means contractors and private companies getting a cut of money that should be spent on resources, equipment and staff at the front line supporting pupils.

“This is just another sign the academy system doesn’t help anyone but the fat cats.
