

GMB responds to Johnson's Brexit 'coup'

This is now going even further than a backroom Westminster stitch up, says GMB Union

GMB, Britain's general union, has responded to Prime Minister Johnson's attempt to sideline Parliamentary democracy.

Tim Roache, GMB General Secretary, said:

"For a Prime Minister who wanted our Parliament to 'take back control' this is as ridiculous as it is worrying for the very foundations of our democracy.

“ Johnson can't have it both ways - the public didn't vote for No Deal, if he's so sure he's in line with the 'will of the people' there's a very easy way to find out - call an election and let us have a public vote.

“This is now going even further than a backroom Westminster stitch up, it's a coup that leaves far too much power in the hands of an unelected Prime Minister.”
